Description

Biologists are calling this the most important discovery since that frozen mammoth was pulled out of some Canadian's swimming pool a couple of years ago. It would seem that the "fictional" animal of Q*Bert video game fame has been confirmed to exist. It is believed to be the last of its species. She was found caged in a garage owned by a programmer of the now classic game. Authorities were alerted to its presence after receiving complaints from neighbors of loud obscene profanity coming from the garage day or night. The authorities recovered the animal along with other contraband and unusual items. The police logged 2 dozen Cuban cigars, panda pornography and the skeleton of a unicorn. The programmer has declined any comment but his lawyer has stated his client will plead insanity claiming he thought the animal was a rabbit.

This auction is for the most important item recovered aside from the animal itself. It is a fertilized egg that contains a living embryo. As we are a government agency with a poor track record when it comes due diligence, we decided the best course of action would be to auction the egg off on eBay to the first chucklehead who could pony up the cash. You will also receive instructions for incubation and further care of your new pet. You have the option of paying via money order or having your pay garnished.

No reserve.
